OTTOMAN PALACE CUISINE FOOD CULTURE

Palace's II. The palace kitchens, which spread over an area of 5250 square meters in its courtyard, are known to be expanded due to the increase in the population of the Palace during the reign of Suleiman the Magnificent (1520-1566). According to Fatih Sultan Mehmet's Law, which determined the palace and state order, the sultans ate their meals alone. Although the sultans had gold and silver dinnerware, they preferred porcelain dishes. In 1638-1657, "The Sultan ate alone in the Private Room or in the garden; the meal includes boiled, oven-spiced or kebab-baked sheep, various grilled meats, desserts, the most famous of which is baklava, custard, rice pudding; water is not drunk during the meal, instead a large bowl of compote is drunk after eating. All meals are served in celadon cups, metal glasses are used for drinks, and hot coffee is drunk in small sips after the meal. Ottoman Palace cuisine is the whole of a culture brought from Central Asia, developed during migration and enriched in Anatolia. High-level courtiers also ate poultry such as geese, ducks, pigeons, and partridges. Fruits such as plums, apples and grapes were used in juicy dishes, these were flavored with spices and honey and vinegar were used in it.

In the palace, meals were eaten twice a day, one in the morning and the other before dark (afternoon). The most spectacular of the collective meals eaten in the Palace II. It was the banquets given in the Divan-ı Hümayun in the courtyard. On the days of the ulufe distribution, which was the most magnificent ceremony of the Palace, foreign ambassadors were invited to the Palace and a meal was given in the Kubbealtı to show the power, might and wealth of the state.

Although some of the palace cuisine, where meat dishes prevailed, has been forgotten over the years, some flavors are still in our lives. Under the strict guidance of Chef Necati Yılmaz, it both reminds you of these delicious recipes and offers you meals worthy of the mouths of sultans. We are sincerely happy to see our guests who come to Istanbul to taste the dishes of the palace cuisine for the first time in our restaurant.
